THE MOALLETER STREET CAR CASE.—A brief reference was made to this case in a local yesterday in which we remarked that the boy was standing on the rear platform at the time he fell or jumped off and met his death. We also spoke of his having gotten on the car to "hook" a ride as boys often do along the line of the road. We were wholly in error in regard to his location on the car at the time of the accident, as he fell or jumped from the front platform. As to the other statement we know nothing in regard to it of our own personal knowledge, our impression having been derived altogether from hearsay. The friends of the lad wholly repudiate any such story, and hold the street car company on plably at stall for his death. Of course the facts of the case will be developed on trial and we trust that no one will prejudge them on account of our allusion to the matter yesterday.

THE BOILERS.—There appears to be no change in the situation respecting the renewal of the contract of last June. Neither manufacturers nor puddlers care to discuss the subject, though it is intimated that should the iron trade continue to improve and flour and provisions advance, a suggestion of a rise in prices for puddling may be among the possibilities.—Pittherph Dispatch.
